

Give Her Space: However ironic, comprehend that your preteen still needs some privacy even if she does live within your home. If it's not a non-negotiable, respect her room in your home. Better to give her room for self-expression there, rather than having her go and do it somewhere else away from you. At least there, you're kept aware even from a distance. Far too often anyway, little one has absolutely nothing to hide. But in case she feels you constantly looking over her shoulder (literally and figuratively), she just might start leaving her journal at school, or begin going to a friend's house for the online market place. Don't give her a reason to keep things from you deliberately.
